Mean distance in convex polyhedra

Dominik Beck

(Charles University, Prague)

The mean distance between two random points uniformly selected from the interior of a given convex polyhedron is derived for various polyhedra using a modification of the Crofton's reduction technique. It is shown that the method can be easily extended to find the exact value of the mean distance in any convex polyhedra in general.